What is it like to attend this school?

This school is a place of healing for the many pupils who join the school after challenging experiences in education. All pupils have dyslexia, and many have other special educational needs and/or disabilities (SEND). Many pupils told us that at this school they are valued for who they are and they, 'don't feel the odd one out anymore.' Pupils learn about themselves and use this self-awareness to overcome whatever challenges they face in learning. They approach learning confidently and with determined focus. They take pride in their many impressive achievements and take positive next steps in education or training.

Pupils are sensitive to their own emotional needs and are considerate of others. They develop strong relationships with staff and pupils. They thrive within the ethos of the school, summarised by one pupil as, 'friendship is magic.' In lessons and during social times, pupils enjoy their time together and bring the best out of each other.

Pupils are safe, emotionally and physically. They care for each other and say that bullying does not happen at the school. When friends fall out, pupils are well equipped to resolve issues. If they cannot, they know that any adult at school would willingly and capably help them.

What does the school do well and what does it need to do better?

Leaders have designed an impressive curriculum for reading and spelling. They precisely identify the needs of pupils and use this information to order an appropriate series of activities for each pupil. Leaders also ensure that pupils read texts that are matched to pupils' abilities exactly. Staff use impressive, evidence-based strategies that enable pupils to read well and enjoy reading. Leaders' refined assessment procedures ensure that staff check pupils' progress effectively and alter activities when necessary.

Many of the strengths in the provision for reading are evident in other areas of the curriculum. However, in some subjects, leaders have not clarified the knowledge pupils must know and the order in which some of the knowledge should be learned. In these subjects, pupils forget some of what has been taught.

Pupils join the school at different ages and times of the year. Nonetheless, pupils quickly learn leaders' high expectations of behaviour. Lessons are calm and free from disruption. Staff understand the needs of pupils with social, emotional and mental health challenges. They know the signs of when pupils' emotions become overwhelming, and they provide effective coaching and support.

Staff teach pupils about the many different lifestyles and beliefs found in society. They have thoughtful discussions about different types of relationships, contemporary issues and the wider world. Pupils learn to value people's differences.

They willingly take responsibility for themselves and others. They learn the importance of democratic values and take part in elections for school officers.

Staff prepare pupils well for adult life and for their next steps in education, employment or training. Pupils have regular time to investigate career options and they receive effective guidance.

Leaders have managed the school well through challenging times due to the pandemic and staff turbulence. Leaders have also increased the number of pupils on roll. Parents, pupils and staff are very confident in leaders' abilities to provide the high-quality provision pupils need. Staff are well supported by leaders with the training they need to teach pupils with SEND and, in particular, dyslexia. Staff appreciate leaders' work to ensure manageable workloads.

Many parents described for inspectors the positive transformation their children went through since joining the school. They appreciate how the school has helped pupils to learn effectively and feel good about themselves. However, some parents are concerned about leaders' communication with parents. Some would like more information about what pupils are studying at school beyond the development of reading and writing. Although leaders provide the required information on their website, they are currently updating the website to inform parents better.

The proprietor has effective systems in place to know the strengths and weaknesses of the school. She provides challenge for leaders and holds them to account for the quality of the school's provision. The proprietor has ensured that the school meets all of the independent school standards.

Safeguarding

The arrangements for safeguarding are effective.

Staff are well trained to be alert and deal with safeguarding concerns effectively. They know their pupils very well and act swiftly and appropriately when concerns arise. Pupils are confident that they can talk with staff when worried about school or issues at home. Leaders work well with external agencies and make sure that vulnerable pupils receive the support they need.

Staff make sure that pupils learn how to stay safe at school, home and online.

Leaders ensure that background checks are carried out to determine the suitability of adults working at the school.

The proprietor and local authority representatives scrutinise leaders' safeguarding policies and procedures to ensure that they are carried out effectively.

What does the school need to do to improve? (Information for the school and proprietor)

- In some areas of the curriculum, leaders have not made clear enough and ordered what pupils must learn. These areas are not taught as well as others, and pupils do not always learn what they need. Leaders must clarify and sequence exactly what pupils need to know and understand across all areas of the curriculum.
- Parents have commented that communication between the school and home needs to be better. Leaders must complete the work on the school's website and ensure that parents have the information they need to understand the provision at school, including the whole school curriculum.

The school meets the independent school standards. These are the requirements set out in the schedule to the Education (Independent School Standards) Regulations 2014.

Inspectors also looked at curriculum plans and spoke to leaders, teachers and pupils about some other subjects.
- To inspect safeguarding, inspectors scrutinised the safeguarding policy and safeguarding records, including the record of background checks of adults at the school. Inspectors spoke with the proprietor, leaders, staff and pupils about safeguarding issues and practices.
